Once more the armory and the Owis demonstrated their drawing power for social affairs, when on Friday evening Norwich nest, No. 1396, Order of Owis, successfully conducted its second annual ball, having the big drillshed filled with a brilliant thront of dincers numwith a brilliant throng of dancers numbering between six and seven hundred for the attractive programme of 20 numbers rendered by Lang's augmented orchestra. For the first hour of the evening, from 8 to 9 wichock, the following con-cert programme was finely rendered by the orchestra and greeted with ap-plause for each number:

Handsome Decorations. In sparkling electric lights from the front of the orchestra gallery the half-ing sign of the Owis, "Hoo Hoo," flush-ed the fraternal greeting to all who entered the hall, while on the front of entered the hall, while on the front of the spectators' gallery was arranged the gold sign of the next, three owls with electrically lighted eyes, and the whole decorative scheme was carried out with an elaborateness that exceed-ed the ball of a year ago and brought forth many compliments for Chairman Jeremiah A. Desmyn of the decoration committee and his efficient assistants. Particularly effective was the emble-committee and his efficient assistants.

Particularly effective was the emblematic centerplece arranged in the center of the floor, built up in pedestal form, upon which stood a large flaxen haired doil, prettily gowned, over whom hovered three owis mounted specimens kindly louned by John Porteous and Nrs. C. L. Allehards of Eroadway. The upper one of the three was a handsome white owi which was shot by Mr. Perteous on Fisher's island, and the other two were brown owns, these two being loaned by Mrs. Richards. On the group was the order's motto. The Owis Protect Me, and in the child's hand was an American flag, while palms were grouped about the pedestal, with blue groupel about the pedestal, with blue and white electric lights among the palms. Southern smilax intertwined with electric light; was draped from the ceiling over the centerpiece. The general decorative scheme around the hall was richly carried out blue and white as the predominant hanging from the rafters of the drill-shed, caught up in wide baits, and in-terspersed with the pink and white frops which had been used in previous salls there in the past week. A heavy rieze of blue was fraped completely ound the side walls, blending in pret ground the side walls, blending in pret-y effect with the blue border of the frogs, and bands of white and joink were arranged under this. The baxes were done in white, with potted plants at each box, and the numbers were in earl designs representing the three Os. There was a pretty floral pyramid in the front hall companyed of pailing.
